

Two eyes Directs the viewer to look in a certain direction.

Straight line pointing at something hidden Research revealed that this was often like a pointing finger or arrow indicating direction.

Going up Was first identified as a locator for hidden panels above this symbol. In sign language, making a spiral with the hands is used to represent the same idea.

Going down An opposite movement and symbol of the above.

Crossing over Symbol used to identify something that had to be crossed over to find something else. In sign language, the idea is expressed by crossing one hand over the other.

Writings or talk As a locator this was used to identify a hidden panel, but in other uses it meant actual conversations.

Go around Meaning one has to veer around something to find something else.

Near This symbol is identical to the sign language movement in which the arm is extended and the hand is bent back toward the person.

Looking similar to two eyes, but means the person may have to look harder.

Missed Used as a locator in terms of “you missed something this way.”
